CITY AND NEIGHBORHOOD.

May from appears tonight (Friday) at the Salt Lake theatre in the clever play, "Mrs. Black is Back." May brings her smile and her song voice with her.

The rush of tourists still continues, and hotel men say that it is likely to continue for another month anyhow. The fair at Portland is doing the business, and many eastern people who never saw Salt Lake before are now enjoying a trip to this city.

Utah's national guard will again have a brigadier general in the near future, according to information from an authoritative source. The new general will be Joseph Geoghegan, at present inspector general on Governor John C. Cutler's staff and acting adjutant general of the guard. It is known that Governor Cutler has twice offered to promote Colonel Geoghegan to the position of adjutant general, with the rank of brigadier general. Colonel Geoghegan's friends now assert that he will accept the appointment, which will probably be made soon after the governor returns from Portland.

Housewives will find nothing new, either in price or quality, when they look just now. There comes news that the oyster will begin to cavort joyfully toward the consumer next week, as a shipment of oysters, with the date of September 10, will be ready to serve, thereby fulfilling the adage that oysters are good only during the month of their name. Of course, these oysters will not be sold on the last day of August, as there is no "r" in it.

Governor John C. Cutler and party left on the Oregon Short Line Monday night for Portland to be present at the celebration of Utah day at the fair. The party included Governor Cutler, Mrs. Cutler, E. H. Cullister, Mrs. Cullister, Ned Callister, William Spry, Colonel A. P. Kessler, Mrs. Kessler, H. E. Booth and William Edgington. Senator Reed Smoot and his family expected to join the party, but the illness of Miss John Smoot, the senator's daughter, made it necessary to postpone their trip to the fair.

The water shortage is still with the people of Salt Lake City, and there are no indications that it will be relieved in the near future. In spite of the assurances made by the opponents of Mayor Richard F. Morris and his administration that there is no scarcity of water, the measurements taken by officials and employees of the city's water department indicate that the city's water supply is limited.

The mayor is seriously contemplating issuing a proclamation offering a reward to the person who will discover where the mayor has concealed the city's water supply, and he is of the opinion that the attempt to solve this mystery would furnish interesting diversion to the "hierarchy hunters" when business gets dull in their regular lines.

With the near approach of the opening of the Utah reservation to mineral locations, the reserve is naturally the focus of hundreds of prospectors, all of whom have the one purpose, that of finding the fabled Caled Rhodes lost gold mine and incidentally as it were, picking up anything else that may turn them good. With Rhodes, who was a trapper and prospector there in the early days of this section, died the secret of the whereabouts of this mine, which, during his life, he was often said to state, was big enough—that is, had enough of the precious metal to finance a national debt. Rhodes passed away at his home near Price some three months ago and though his demise was sudden, it is believed by many that he left with his wife plots and maps that would lead to the mine. Others, who have less faith, do not think that Rhodes ever had a map of the reservation and think the whole thing is a myth.

Mrs. Isabel Cameron Brown, wife of ex-Senator Brown, died Tuesday afternoon at the family residence, of stomach trouble. Mrs. Brown was one of the most prominent club women in the state, and her loss is a national calamity. Her husband, who was a prominent lawyer and politician, died in 1888. Mrs. Brown was about 55 years old at the time of her death. She was born in Kalama, Mich., where she was educated. She was a descendant of the Sperry of historical fame, and of John Paul Jones. On her father's side she was of direct Scotch descent. In 1880 Mrs. Brown came to Utah.

A new mineral product for Utah and one of great value in the way of a rare metal, in quantities almost beyond computation, has been discovered in the Continental mines at Alta. The metal is molybdenum, worth about $2.50 a pound, and the announcement was made yesterday by Henry M. Crowther of the Continental Mines & Smelter corporation. It is used for hardening steel, particularly in making mathematical instruments and any fine steel devices where hardness, strength and durability are required.

Mrs. Dennis E. Gleason and daughter, Miss Ada T. Whittless, left for Los Angeles Monday afternoon for a six weeks' visit with relatives and friends. They went by way of the San Pedro, Los Angeles & Salt Lake route.

A hurry was created at the camp of the Seventh Adventists in Jefferson's grove, at the corner of Jefferson avenue and Canyon road, when the health officers announced that the mine, where William L. Alway, who has been conducting the camp meeting since the past week, was afflicted with smallpox. The symptoms of the disease were first noticed by a physician from Salt Lake, who was attending the services, and who after the meeting advised the minister of his suspicions and suggested that he isolate himself from the rest of the congregation. To this Mr. Alway readily assented, but stated that he had believed the eruption on his hands and face was due to barber's itch. For several days he has been isolated. When the health officers went to the camp and told the campers that the case was undoubtedly one of smallpox, there was a hasty and somewhat undignified scramble among the campers to get away. Mr. Alway has almost recovered, as he had been afflicted with the sores for some time before he went into voluntary quarantine.

A terrific grass and brush fire raged last week inside the limits of Ogden City, which called for the most heroic efforts of the fire department to keep it within safe limits, and finally subdue it.

At the night session of the irrigation congress at Portland, Ore., hundreds of people were turned away from the auditorium who had been attracted by the fact that a selection by the great Mormon choir, 200 voices strong, of Ogden, was on the programme, as well as the fact that United States District Attorney Francis J. Heney made his appearance at the forum for the first time since he began the prosecution of the notorious land frauds cases.

BE INDEPENDENT.

Everyone should lay something by for a rainy day. Old age and infirmities should not be made worse by penury. No matter what station one may occupy, it is important to provide a competency, however small, upon which to live when incapacitated for work. The man who goes along improvidently during his working years will probably be an unemployed beggar upon someone in his declining years.

WILLIAM HOEY KEARNEY REDMOND.
Member of Parliament representing East Clare, Ireland. He will arrive in Salt Lake on Tuesday Night.

William Hoey Kearney Redmond, the brilliant and patriotic representative of East Clare in the British parliament, and brother of the present Irish leader, Hon. John E. Redmond, M. P., will, within the next few weeks, address half a dozen meetings in the principal cities of the United States while he is on his way across the continent from San Francisco, returning from Australia to Ireland.

Redmond has been in Australia for his health for several months past, his health having been shattered by his latest imprisonment in connection with the national movement in Ireland. When the present Tory government returned to office in London, Redmond was one of the first men arrested under the re-narrowed coercion regime. He had only just returned to Ireland from a visit to the United States, where he and Mr. relative Devin, M. P. for North Kilkenny, had completed a most successful organizing tour in the interest of the United Irish league in this country.

Mr. Redmond was sentenced to six months' imprisonment in Kilmallock jail, and he served the greater part of his term. He was subsequently commuted to another sentence and abandoned his career politics.

Mr. Redmond had suffered severely during his rigorous imprisonment, and he was subsequently compelled to interrupt his parliamentary attendance and take a prolonged rest on the continent. In the effort to recover his strength, his progress towards recovery was exceedingly slow, however, and last winter he was ordered to take a prolonged sea voyage and remain a considerable time in some warm climate, so that his health may be restored. He therefore proceeded to Australia, where he has a number of relatives by marriage and is now returning to Ireland by way of San Francisco. He is accompanied by Mrs. Redmond, who is by birth an Australian, and by his daughter, Miss Dalton.

Although it was Mr. Redmond's intention when going to Australia to address a series of public meetings, his court-tyranny in the antipodes when they found he was among them, insisted on his addressing several large meetings in the cities of Australia, and he has been successful in securing considerable financial support for the Irish movement.

Mr. Redmond and his elder brother, the present leader of the Irish Nationalist movement, made a tour of the Australian colonies and succeeded in securing a large amount of support for the cause of Ireland. On his present trip, Mr. Redmond has likewise succeeded in having the cabinet ministers and high government officials of the colonies declare their hearty support of the Irish Nationalist movement, and endorse the demand of the Irish people for self-government.

But perhaps the most effective ally in support of his work there has been Cardinal Moran, the head of the Catholic church in Australia, who not only attended and spoke at Mr. Redmond's meetings in Sydney and elsewhere, but has taken the preliminary steps towards establishing a permanent fund in support of the Nationalist movement.

Mr. Redmond, notwithstanding his impaired health, is still comparatively young, being in his 45th year. He was born in Wexford in 1861, and was the late William Archer Redmond, M. P., who sat as a Nationalist representative for the borough of Wexford from 1872 till his death in 1889.

William Redmond was educated at the famous Jesuit college of Clongue, outside of Dublin, and took his degree as B. L. at Dublin university in 1881. He was first elected to parliament in 1882 as member for the borough of Wexford, which was at one time represented by his father, and when the borough was disfranchised under the redistribution of seats bill in 1885, he was elected to the House of Commons for the late William Archer Redmond, for which he sat till the general election in 1892, when he was elected for East Clare, which he still represents.

Mr. Redmond has been a Nationalist from boyhood and served the first of half a dozen terms of imprisonment before he had become of age. Indeed he passed his 21st birthday on April 15, 1881, a prisoner in Kilmallock jail under Forester's coercion act, being one of the earliest "suspects" arrested when that measure became law.

As has been stated, he has served several terms of imprisonment since and was the last member of the Irish party imprisoned under the coercion act to be released three years ago. William Redmond is almost as well known to his constituents throughout the world as is his brother, the present chairman of the Irish party. He has visited Australia twice in the interest of the Irish movement, and this makes his fifth visit to the United States in the same work. He traveled all over the American continent at Parnell's request in 1882, addressing meetings and arousing interest in the land league movement.

He came again in 1884, when, with Thomas Sexton, then the orator of the Irish party, he visited Boston to attend at Parnell's personal representative at the great convention of the American land league held in Faneuil hall in August of that year. No Irish delegate that has ever visited America was more popular than the young man who is now the representative of East Clare in the English parliament, and among his countrymen in America at that date.

William Redmond represents in his own person some historic episodes in Irish history. Some of his family shed their blood for Ireland in the memor-
